NDP win opens door to greener economy in Alberta

6 May 2015 – Edmonton - Following the stunning results of Alberta's provincial election that gave Rachel Notley and the NDP a large majority of seats in the legislature, Mike Hudema, a Climate and Energy campaigner with Greenpeace Canada said:

“The NDP win shows that Albertans are craving and ready for change. Alberta voters said loud and clear they're tired of a government that works on behalf of the oil industry at the expense of average families and the environment and they want one that works for everyone in the province.

We congratulate Premier Notley on her historic victory and look forward to working with her and her government to create a prosperous province that not only does its fair share to fight climate change, but leads the country in creating the diverse, green energy economy our world so desperately needs.”
