Greenpeace statement on Trudeau government's first throne speech

4 December 2015 (Edmonton) – In response to the new Liberal Government of Canada's first Speech from the Throne, Mike Hudema, a Climate and Energy campaigner with Greenpeace Canada said:

"We applaud the government for recognizing that a strong economy depends on a strong environment. In order to secure a strong environment for this generation and the next, the government must act on the growing climate crisis. This means working with the provinces to keep the carbon in the ground, putting a significant price on carbon, nation-wide, and providing the supports and resources needed to transition Canada to a 100% renewable energy future. That commitment should begin in Paris, where we need greater ambition from the Trudeau government."
