

702 H Street NW Suite 300
Washington DC 20001
tel: 202.462.1177 fax: 202.462.4507
greenpeace.org

May 5, 2011

J. Wayne Leonard
Chairman and Chief Executive Officer
Entergy Corporation
639 Loyola Ave.
New Orleans, LA 70113

Dear Mr. Leonard,

We at Greenpeace listened with great interest as you told stockholders and financial analysts that you couldn't have a Fukushima sized earthquake or a tsunami on the Hudson and that in a worst case scenario Entergy would have Indian point "regenerating in three to seven days." Incredible; the Nuclear Regulatory Commission's worst case estimates show that an accident at just one of Indian Point's reactors could cause 50,000 fatalities and cost $314 billion and that doesn't even address the threat posed by the radioactive waste pools.

Rather than a lesson in geography, geology and plate tectonics, your stockholders would have been better served had you outlined the proactive steps Entergy was taking to learn the lessons of the disaster in Japan and detailed the potential costs of incorporating them. Instead, we heard that your corporation has learned little and will likely do even less unless forced to by regulation.

As one state regulator put it, "If you are foolish enough or pompous enough to think that you can't learn lessons from what is happening in Japan then you are at fault."

What actions will Entergy take at its GE boiling water reactors of the same design as those at Fukushima and at Indian Point in response to the events in Japan? More than 17 million people live within 50 miles of Indian Point and a catastrophic release of radiation from the reactors or radioactive waste pools would be devastating. Has this given any pause to your company's efforts run this aging nuclear plant longer and harder than ever before?

What, if anything, has your corporation learned from the Fukushima disaster?

Sincerely,

Jim Riccio Greenpeace

Enclosure: Photo of Greenpeace airship A. E. Bates over Vermont Yankee; DVD of Greenpeace Video: Chernobyl, Fukushima, Indian Point?

CC: Maureen S. Bateman, W. Frank Blount, Gary W. Edwards, Alexis Herman, Donald C. Hintz, Stuart L. Levenick, Blanche Lincoln, Stewart C. Myers, James R. Nichols, William A. Percy, II, W. J. "Billy" Tauzin, Steven V. Wilkinson